A LABYRINTH LORD / ADVANCED EDITION COMPANION

ROGUES GALLERY

BY THE VENOMOUS PAO
MORE THAN 150 PREGENERATED CHARACTERS FOR YOUR LABYRINTH LORD GAME

Do you need:

• A quick replacement for a dead character?
• An NPC to befriend or bedevil your players?
• An entire adventuring party at a moment’s notice?

Well, my friend, look no further than the Strange Stones Labyrinth Lord/Advanced Edition Companion Rogues Gallery. Within these pages you will find plenty of daring compatriots and dastardly antagonists rolled up and ready to go.

Introduce your gang to the kindly Sylania Sunsong (Elven Magic-User), Oltorf of the Hills (Dwarven Fighter) and Brother Ginnity (Human Cleric). Torment them with Urlen Relk (Half-Orc Cleric/Thief), Arvo & Errom Tir (Gnome Illusionists), and Mohrgrest The Grim (Half-Elven Fighter/Assassin). Or perhaps you’d prefer to pit The Silent Legion Of Valerius Caesar, The Purple Herbalists, or The Sisters Of True Desire against your own colorfully-named band of murder hobos?

No matter your need, this slim volume contains a small army to help you achieve your goals. And when your players ask why their belt pouches are suddenly so much lighter, try to suppress your glee when you tell them they’re the latest victims of the notorious Lermo Lightfingers (Halfling Thief).
INTRODUCTION

One of the things I have always loved about RPGs is the whole process of character creation. From the first time I rolled 3d6 in order to generate Ichabod the Elf for Moldvay D&D through the countless Champions, Justice Inc., and other Hero System characters I lovingly crafted, and on into the succinct beauty of a Barbarians of Lemuria character, the act of creating personalities to explore has always drawn me back to the games.

Second only to creating my own characters has been the joy I’ve found in looking at other people’s characters. From the pre-grens in the back of module B1 and the entirety of the AD&D Rogues Gallery through Traveller Supplements 1 and 4 and on I’ve always enjoyed looking at characters. Imagining them in action, responding to whatever bizarre thing should come to pass during a night’s play – that’s just plain fun for me.

So it’s no surprise that at StrangeStones.com I focus a lot on creating characters – ostensibly offered up as NPCs for the reader to throw into a game when needed – the way other bloggers turn out spells, settings, monsters and such.

One of the first things I did when I got Strange Stones up and running was to explore this fascination of mine by pumping out a bunch of characters for the Labyrinth Lord Advanced Edition Companion, which happened to be released right about the same time I got started blogging. This compilation presents these constructs in a single handy volume. They’re still available on the blog, of course, but sometimes it’s nice to have one place to go for your NPC or pre-gen needs rather than hunting through some random dude’s website.

So here they are. A handful of characters of each classic D&D class, ready for use however you see fit. I have refrained from doing the hard work of giving them personalities or backstories, if only so that other GMs and players can run with them however they choose. So the next time your players fall victim to a devious, party-killing trap and you want to keep playing without even the short time required to make new fodder, grab a select few of these and hit the ground running. Or use them as rival adventurers that your players come across deep within a dungeon. Or whatever. They’re here to use when you need them.

GAME INFORMATION

It should go without saying, but just to be complete... All of the following characters were generated for Labyrinth Lord / Advanced Edition Companion and most are 1st level. All were granted maximum HP (AEC Advanced Option style) at 1st level and have a bare minimum of equipment.

Those who can cast Magic-User or Illusionist spells have at least two randomly determined spells in their spellbooks. Those who can cast Cleric or Druid spells currently have the maximum number of spells they can memorize at their level — as modified by their Wisdom scores — in memory.

All of these characters were created “by the book” — with 3d6 for stats, more often than not in order. The weakest characters I generated were left to die by the roadside, though. So the adventurers you find within these pages should make for playable PCs.

Also, given Labyrinth Lord’s lineage, you should have no trouble at all using these characters with other related games, including OSRIC, Swords & Wizardry, and (of course) the various original source games – one of which I hear is being reprinted soon.

A BRIEF NOTE ON THE SECOND EDITION

Some of you may have downloaded the first PDF compilation of the Strange Stones Rogues Gallery in the past. A couple of things changed with this new version. First, I upped the Hit Dice for all the characters to the Advanced Style. Second, I went back and added headgear to the original characters. Lastly, I had posted a boatload more characters since that compilation, so those are now included in this edition.

SPEAKING OF HEADGEAR

The whole idea of headgear as an identifying characteristic for Labyrinth Lord characters comes from the B/X Blackrazor blog. Go there and download the random headgear charts for use in your own games. You won’t be disappointed.

ADVENTURING PARTIES

THE LEGION OF MOSSY STONE

Calling themselves the Legion of Mossy Stone, this group of young malcontents has been sent away from their peaceful village (Caonacloch, called Mossy Stone by those who don't speak the regional dialect) to "find their way in the world" (or, perhaps, get lost and not return to annoy their elders further). What grand adventures await them? Will they ever make their way home? Will their village regret packing off their best and brightest some day?

THE COMPANY OF THE CROW

Calling themselves The Company of the Crow, this group of adventurers has yet to make a name for themselves beyond the tavern where they met. And the jail where they spent the next week. And the stables where they were forced to clean up after the horses they attempted to steal. They are a rowdy bunch, but deep down inside most of them mean well. Who knows what adventures await them? One thing is certain, though: they have snappy head gear.

THE PURPLE HERBALISTS

For reasons they appear to be unwilling to share, each member of this group of multifaceted magicians (and their one-dimensional bodyguard) always wears at least one article of clothing that has been dyed a deep purple. They are traveling in search of various rare herbs to use either as components for their spells or, perhaps, to sell to other, less adventurous wizards. Snickeringly referred to as The Purple Herbalists by several rival adventuring parties, this group does not seek fame for their exploits, so they have not bothered to name themselves anything else. If their choices in attire and bizarre mannerisms make them inscrutable to barman, inn keeper and highwayman alike, so much the better.

THE SISTERS OF TRUE DESIRE

Sent forth from their sacred temple in the Wieghorst mountains by the high priestess of Lofn, the goddess of forbidden love and illicit unions, the Sisters Jytte, Anne-Lis, and Rakel are on a mission to convince the great Jarl Valdemar that his seven sons should be allowed to marry the women of their choosing, rather than the "proper" brides the Jarl will soon announce he has selected. The brothers Lundgaard, favorites of the clergy of Lofn for their strict vows of non-alignment, serve as the Sisters' guardians. Unbeknownst to these travelers, agents of Markgreve Torbjorn - whose seven daughters are the most likely candidates for official selection as brides - pursue this band and aim to prevent them from ever reaching the halls - and ears - of Jarl Valdemar.

The Winter Elves

Riding out of the frozen north, each upon his own sleigh drawn by a distinct pair of reindeer, this fearsome quartet of Winter Elves makes annual raids on the villages of men, always on the day when the sun shines least. Some of the victimized villagers leave items of tribute beneath lighted trees to keep the elves from ransacking their homes. Others use snow to construct "guardsmen" on their lawns in an effort to frighten the elves away. Still others leave freshly baked - and freshly poisoned - pies and cakes at their doors in the hope of ridding themselves of the elves once and for all. Legend foretells the coming of a hero - a saint dressed in red, with alabaster hair and eyes that twinkle - who will bring these fiends to heel. Could this be the year the people are saved?

The Fugitives Of Darlsfort

Fleeing the frontier city of Darlsfort the night before an onslaught of goblinoid forces led by the evil sorceress Xeriaven, this group of young adventurers are ill-prepared for the challenges that await them in the dungeons and wildernesses they must traverse before they can hope to reach a new place to call home. Bickering, bitter recriminations and quite possibly brutal death await them on their journey.

Will Mad Piotr drag them all down with his unpredictable behavior? Will the pompous know-it-all Hagidox alienate himself from the safety of the group with his lectures and constant upbraiding? Will Sylmira grow weary of her childish companions and leave them to their fates if the opportunity presents itself? And what of the self-centered thief Rallen Pangkit? Are any safe when his turn to stand watch comes up? Only Mats Taldinson, dimwitted priest of Balder, has any chance of holding this loosely-knit group together long enough to navigate their way to a new life.

THE MUJZHAD'ARIN FIVE

Well met in Mujzhad, the members of this colorful company of adventurers come from the various lands to the east of The City of Spices, where non-human races seldom travel. The story of their first encounter with a band of dwarven merchants in the central souq quickly became an oft-requested tale popular amongst the storytellers who travel with the caravans that cross the deserts of the East. Following the map given to them by a strange beggar in the streets of Omaq, the Mujzhad'arin Five are now headed deep into the Western steppes in search of the lost vault of Uvisorg Vaba, the Dark Alchemist of Mredvechla.

On the dark and heavily-forested island called Bexia, small, poorly-fortified human settlements crouch in the shadows, fearful of the malevolent elves of the woods. To one of these, called Eorus by those who lived there, came Destrand, an eerie boy of scant years, bearing tales of silver palaces, lost cities, amber castles, and a mountain of fire - all just beyond the great River Orv. His unearthly words seeped into the consciousness of the town and soon a number of foolhardy souls determined to set out in search of these unimagined sights and the treasures the boy claimed were hidden within. Furthanos, Acolyte of Albinard the True. Savara the Witch, with her toad familiar Uvyn. Ox-like Surt, the blacksmith's son. And Normac Finwyr, the ninth incarnation of Jagragon’s chosen prophet. These four set out with the strange child on the Eve of Evangeline and were ne’er seen in Eorus again.

It's well known that the City of Iron produces some odd adventurers. Perhaps it's something in the rust-red water that flows in the River Vaign. Perhaps it's got something to do with the odd gods who are worshipped there, like Assedh and Hegg. Or maybe it's due to all of the magical research that goes on there. Whatever the cause, this small group of treasure-seekers has embarked on a great journey that could bring them fame & fortune or ignominious defeat. Their fate is in your hands now, gentle reader.

After his successful campaign to retake the frontier town of Bergerwald from the Ard barbarians, young noble Tullius Regulus, along with his friend the recently freed gladiator Marius, his maiden aunt, the scholarly Laelia Laurentia, and the gruff priest Cassian are dispatched by the Empire to Anteria, on the coast of Adanthum. There they are informed by Propraetor Justiuso that they must venture deep into the darkest heart of the continent to seek out the fabled City of Scales where the great magus Ciusenius Secanius is said to have secreted away his blasphemous scrolls of prophecy. What adventures will they have as they wind their way through the deserts and jungles of Adanthum? What does Great Caesar need of these legendary writings? Driven out of the gloomy seaside town of his birth by the superstitious village elders, Jerald Istholam wandered southward along the rocky coastline of Nogoloth, pausing too often to stare out at the grey and moody sea that seemed to beckon to him darkly. Drawing upon the last reserves of his strength he turned away from the whispering waves and headed inland, intent upon making his way to the great city of Khaarm. There, amid the wisest sages and holiest priests, he would find the answers to the eldritch riddle of his lineage. Along the road to his ultimate fate he would befriend others whose very natures made them unwelcome in the petty and inconsequential civilization cobbled together by those sad creatures known as "men."

Note: The character races and some of the spells presented in this adventuring party are drawn from the Goblinoid Games book Realms Of Crawling Chaos, which provides rules for Lovecraftian fantasy.

The Color Wizards of Ghuzzar

The great wizards of the world of Ghuzzar have moved far beyond the restrictions that bedevil lesser users of magic. Thus, they freely use arms and armor as well – and as often – as they wield the mystical arts. To represent this, they have been presented here with the “Elf” class from Labyrinth Lord rather than any other combination. Rest assured, though, that these five beings are far beyond any concept of race, though all at least appear human.

You might also note that these characters are listed with only partial alignments – that is because they have transcended the concepts of good, evil, and even balance between the two. Heavy stuff.

Note: The “color wizard” concept used in this group of characters was originally presented by Lord Kilgore in his Five Color Magic blog post. Additionally, the idea of using the Elf class to represent ancient arcane beings comes from the Swords & Wizardry Core rulebook.
